MESSAGE

For three decades, the Banag-Banag Inc. Bisayan Speaking Association has been thriving and creating a remarkable impact on its members and in many communities in New South Wales, Australia. With its various activities for socialization and philanthropy, the group has not only showcased the Bisayan generosity but also its commitment to uplifting our fellow Filipinos. It has also proven how one's heritage can be nurtured no matter where fate brings a person, showing that one's identity can only be made stronger by embracing both one's roots and present reality.

As the organization marks its 30th Anniversary, I extend my most heartfelt congratulations to the entire community—from its pioneers to its newest additions, and from its officers and members to its partners and beneficiaries. Now over 250-strong, it is worth recognizing that the successful increase in numbers and social responsibility projects could only flow from a deep sense of your solidarity and a genuine heart to share goodness with others. For this, congratulations to you all.

May your celebration be a time to remember and honor all the favorable outcomes of your passion and unity. Let this occasion likewise spur greater joy in your future gatherings and pursuits, especially as you continue to uphold the pride of the Filipino while you forge an exciting destiny in Australia.

Again, congratulations to everyone! Padayon!

Blacktown
City Council

Dear Banag-Banag Community

It is my pleasure to congratulate you on your 30th anniversary.

There are more than 25,000 people in Blacktown City who were born in the Philippines and they are vital contributors to the cultural fabric of our community.

Council and the Filipino community come together each year to mark the anniversary of Philippine independence and celebrate your culture.

I was pleased we extended the celebrations this year with a cultural exhibit at Max Webber Library at Blacktown. The exhibit showed cultural dress, artistic imagery and migratory stories and was a fine introduction to Filipino Australians for the wider community.

When I walk through our town centres, I often notice the Filipino contribution, from restaurants offering authentic food to people speaking Bisayan and other languages.

This influence extends to Council decision-making. Two Filipino Australians have been Blacktown City Councillors in recent years.

Australia and the Philippines have a strong friendship based on shared values and interests, and Banag-Banag is a fitting embodiment of this.

The cultural exchanges you provide strengthens diversity and promotes tolerance and understanding.

I look forward to your continued success and trust you enjoy your celebrations.

Best wishes

Brad Bunting

Mayor of Blacktown City

This year is no ordinary year: it is the 30th anniversary of Banag-Banag Incorporated. From its humble beginnings as a weekly gathering of Visayan speaking Filipino-Australian migrants in Sydney, Banag-Banag has since grown to become not just one of the most active, but the most colourful and oldest association of Visayan speaking Filipino-Australian migrants in New South Wales. The fact that it is celebrating its 30th birthday tonight is proof of its longevity and resilience.

Through the years and up to today, Banag-Banag has supported charitable and humanitarian projects in NSW, among them: scholarship projects too poor but deserving students at Don Bosco technical school in Cebu City, giving financial and in-kind support to orphanages in Negros Oriental such as the Friendship Foundation Home, computer and book donations to various schools and a home for the elderly in Leyte, promoting Philippine coffee in New South Wales, and supporting youth and cultural initiatives in Sydney. Banag-Banag thus, for Filipino Australians in New South Wales, a “home away from home”.

I have always looked for an association that takes good care of the priorities and needs of the youth in the Philippines, whether students or orphans. And also an association that takes care of the Filipino-Australian leaving behind their land of birth and settling permanently in this beautiful land down under. I find that in this association. I’m also happy of the warm love and friendship I received from fellow officers and members of the association.

No man is an island, as the song and John Donne’s poem goes. For whom the bell rolls, it tolls for me. The little help Banag-Banag has extended to the students and youth in both the Philippines and Australia will have long-lasting ramification to the lives of people. I am happy to be part of that endeavour, and to be this year’s President of an association I can rightly be proud of!

Mabuhay, and “Let’s Party at 30!”

On Seneca's "Life Is Long If You Know How to Use It"

by Gil Marvel Tabucanon

Given a short lifespan, how much choice do we really have to lead a life of meaning? How much or how little lie "within our power" given that our time on earth "only lasts an hour" in the curt lines of Emily Dickinson?

When we opened our eyes the first time, things were there for us! We have our families, our distinct looks, gender, religion, personality, capacity and predispositions. The whole "birth" package came to us for free and without our choosing.

But, there are also aspects left free for us to pick: we can choose how we spend our time, where to live, what to believe in, who to love and which friend to explore the world with! Whether trekking to mountains or exploring philosophical ideas together, friends make our choices easier and our steps lighter.

Yet, Seneca in "On the Shortness of Life: Life Is Long If You Know How to Use It", notes how we waste a lot of our time in idle thinking and meaningless pursuits. We easily forget time is that precious commodity given to us on loan. He reminds us our life's most important resource – our time – is non-renewable, hence the need to use it wisely and meaningfully.

Beyond the repetitive grind of work, business or occupation, and the fun times spent on our days off, what else do we do to give our days meaning?

What pursuits warm us, what thoughts lead us to burn our midnight candles doing the work we truly love. If we have our druthers, what will we do that's not motivated by money, power or success?

An improper use of time, for Seneca, is one devoted to proving or showing off how successful or privileged one's social standing is, calling those with such lifestyles "idly preoccupied" in engaging wasteful pursuits. If anything, such pursuits are aimed not so much in doing our life's vocation, but done rather to cater to that childish need to make others admire us – but, if I may add, to what purpose or end?

Stoic philosopher Epictetus says "never depend on the admiration of others – there is no strength to it. Personal merit cannot be derived from an external source". By extension, personal merit cannot also be received through our association with famous or talented people, for, says Epictetus, "you have been given your own work to do – [thus] get to it right now. Do your best at it and don't be concerned with who is watching you."

There is also a life lived in social distraction and entertainments. Seneca recognizes the need for leisure and socialization. Nonetheless, a life devoted almost exclusively towards pleasure is meaningless. He says "when life is squandered through soft and careless living, and when it's spent on no worthwhile pursuit, death finally presses and we realize that the life which we didn't notice passing has passed away".

The reason why we squander much of our time according to Seneca is we forget how limited our loaned time is, and that soon we are going to die:

"You live as if you were destined to live forever. No thought of your frailty ever enters your head, of how much time has already gone by you take no heed. You squander time as if you drew from a full and abundant supply, though all the while that day which you bestow on some person or thing is perhaps your last."

Seneca thus counsels us to be wary of any activity which will take much of our time away from our life's true goals and pursuits. For instance, why are we here, what is the purpose of our being here, and how will we find out what we were really intended to do. My answer to this is at the end of each day, when all is said and done, we will know. There is that little voice from within that urges, and prods us and won't stop, until we listen to it. We do not know where that voice comes from – but it is there. It is our guide and it is real.

Epictetus, echoing Seneca, agrees that while we do get distracted at times and often engage in various amusements, these should not dominate our lives thereby making us forget our true purpose. To help us recognize our life's true goals Epictetus gives us the analogy of life on a voyage towards our life's true aims:

"If you were on a voyage and the ship is anchored in a harbor, you might go ashore for water and happen to pick up a shellfish or a plant. But be careful; listen for the call of the captain. Keep your attention directed at the ship. Getting distracted by trifles is the easiest thing in the world. Should the captain call, you must be ready to leave those distractions and come running, without even looking back. If you are old, do not go far from the ship, or you might fail to appear when you are called for."
